Lori specializes in issues arising in insurance company transactions and other federal income tax issues affecting insurance companies. Her substantive tax experience began with four years with the Corporate Tax and Reorganization Branch of the Internal Revenue Service, where she addressed corporate tax issues for financially troubled businesses. She has been at the firm since 1992 where she focuses on issues arising in reinsurance transactions, consolidated returns, structured settlements and audit and controversy matters. She has spent considerable time advising state insurance departments on the matters relating to insurance companies in rehabilitation and liquidation proceedings. Lori is a 1988 graduate of George Mason University Law School and has an LL.M. in taxation from Georgetown University. She is also the Co-Coordinator of the Federal Bar Association Insurance Tax Seminar and a frequent writer of articles on various insurance tax issues.
